

ABSTRACT

A polymer assisted solution process for deposition of semiconductive thin films is presented. The process can be organic solvent-free. The process includes solutions of necessary metal precursors and soluble polymers. After a coating operation, the resultant 5 coating is fired at high temperatures to yield optical quality metal oxide thin films that can be converted to semiconductive thin films.